Saying Thank You in the workplace conveys such sentiments as I Appreciate You, I Care, and You Matter. Messages of this kind are always important to send to valued employees, and they are particularly important in today’s economic climate. Let your star employees know you appreciate them all year long in these little ways:

A Private time with you.
Schedule lunch dates with employees. Give them an opportunity to select the luncheon site, and use the time to simply get to know them better. Tell them how critical they are to you and the team, then ASK them some questions, like:
- What can I do to keep you on my team?
- What part of your work do you find most enjoyable?
- What might make your work life easier?
- What could I do to be more supportive or to help you be even more effective?

B A long-awaited action item-done!
Think hard about an employee who has asked you for something that you’ve put on your very lengthy “to do” list – and there it sits. Stop passing the BUCK. Surprise that employee – and just do it.

C An honest talk about the future.
Offer to have a CAREER conversation with an employee. Hold it in a quiet, private place or off-site if possible. Try any or all of the following questions to get the conversation started: What part of your current job do you enjoy doing the most? Least? Which of your talents have I not yet used? What different jobs might you like to see yourself doing in the future?

D The honor of representing the company at a conference.
Offer DIGNITY – the chance to attend an outside conference/seminar series designed especially for their affinity group.

E A chance to grow professionally.
Allow the employee to choose from a list of potential projects, assignments and tasks that could ENRICH his or her work.

F Recognizing your employee’s family.
Give an employee a pre-paid phone card to call FAMILY or friends (get an international card for employees with loved ones far away), or offer to have someone design a web site for their family, and include a one-year subscription for e-mail. Or give a free pass for either X-days or X-hours off to attend children’s school programs or sports activities. Or ask your employee how they would like to honor “family.” Are you open to these ideas?

G Talking about your employee’s next move:
Offer to brainstorm alternative career possibilities. (Again, do this off-site if possible.) Try to help that employee leverage their options to reach his/her GOALS. Use the LEVERR framework. Consider Lateral, Enrichment, Vertical, Exploratory, Realignment (moving down to move into something else) and Relocation. (Yes, ouch... but do talk about it.)

H Serving on an interview committee for a key position.
Allow an employee to participate in the HIRING process for a new manager – one level above them, or more.

I Nourishing your employee’s professional interests.
Offer a free one-year subscription to an employee’s favorite business magazine and have it sent to their home. Satisfy their need for INFORMATION.

J Submit to a critical employee’s “pruning.”
OK. This may be one of the tougher gifts to give. But here it is. Ask the employee that you never see eye to eye with, the one who is the least like you, to give you some straight talk about how you might work better together. Yes, offer this to the one who may think you’re a JERK. Listen very carefully. DON’T defend. Then, take a step towards changing one behavior.

K A unique “perk” for fun.
Give an employee a KICKS Coupon. Tell them that this entitles them to spend up to X on a way to take a break or have some fun at work. (It could involve the entire team.) Or, offer a menu of low-cost possibilities and let them choose. Need some examples?

- taking an afternoon off to see a movie
- bringing a child (or dog) to work one day
- ordering in pizza and watching a video during lunch
- bringing your golf coach in to give a lesson to your colleagues

Or is one of your direct reports a sports nut? An opera fan? A theater buff? Probably tickets to see their favorite team, diva or playwright rank higher on the appreciation scale than that standard turkey bonus. And it shows that you care about the employee as an individual.

L A priceless introduction.
Ask an employee for the name of someone in the organization that he/she would love to meet, chat with, and learn more about. Create the LINK. Provide an introduction and encourage your employee to decide on how he/she would like to spend time with the chosen connection.

M A workplace personal trainer session.
Consider a gift certificate entitling an employee to lunch with you or another MENTOR of his/her choosing for the purpose of being coached on one or more topics.

N Three wishes.
Think about a key employee that you don’t want to lose. Run the NUMBERS on the cost of replacing that employee. (It could involve the entire team.) Or, offer a menu of low-cost possibilities and let them choose. Need some examples?

- Check out the cost of offering that employee some stay here incentives. (Think of incentives other than money, and base your list on what you know about that person.) Pick three that you would be willing to offer. Now set a date to chat.

O Open a new door.
Brainstorm an OPPORTUNITY hit list with an employee – some might be about growing, learning or stretching, in some new way. Others could be related to a chance to see another part of the business. Prioritize the list and then open a door!

P Blend your employee’s work and passion.
Have a PASSION Breakfast. (Maybe this is something you offer to all your employees, as a team, or one on one.) Simply ask… What do you love to do? At work? Outside of work? Brainstorm a bit and then commit to helping them build more of this into the workday.

Q An exception to the rules.
Give a Bend the Rules pass that involves and encourages bending (or breaking) the status quo. Then stay open and bend as much as you can when they make their request. Show that you’ll QUESTION the rules.

R Play genie in a bottle to your employee’s recognition wish list.
Ask an employee to write down six ways they would like to be Rewarded. (Maybe this is something you offer to all your employees, as a team, or one on one.) Simply ask… What do you love to do? At work? Outside of work? Brainstorm a bit and then commit to helping them build more of this into the workday.

S Help them feel at home at work.
Offer a shopping spree to a local supply store for an employee to get items (no staplers or paper clips allowed) to personalize his/her SPACE: office, vehicle, work station or cubicle.

T Listen to the truth—over lunch!
Talk about gift giving. This one – the TRUTH – is powerful. We know of one division head who gave each employee $50, told them to choose a restaurant and take their manager out to lunch for some straight talk and honest feedback about performance and development needs.

U A chance to download.
Give 12 coupons for listening time—one for each month where an employee can come for 20 minutes and talk to you about anything. Your job is to UNDERSTAND, i.e., just listen to them.

V Honor your employee’s values.
Over a cappuccino, glass of wine, or a cup of tea, try asking one of your employees any of these questions:

- What makes a perfect day at work?
- Looking back, what’s made you the most satisfied?
- What does success mean to you?

Take notes. Read your notes back to that employee. What have you both learned about his/her VALUES? How can you put that information to use?

W A day of improving health.
Have a limousine pick up an employee for a full day at a spa. Give gift coupons for Tai-Chi, yoga or golf lessons. You get the idea! Encourage WELLNESS.

X Play time.
Give a fun-loving X-ER (or anyone) a series of Get out and Play cards that they can redeem at their discretion. For example: Leave work early to go to a movie, or shopping, or play extreme Frisbee.

Y The starring role, for once.
Give an employee a chance to lead that project that you’ve been hoarding for yourself. (You’ll know which it is!) Offer the spotlight. YIELD. Coach when necessary. What has he/she learned? What did you learn?

Z Your promise to repeat the gift.
If this kind of gift giving worked, offer to do it again – before the next holiday! Now you’ve reached the gift-giving ZENITH.
